Dumile at Sao Paulo

Dumile, the Bantu artist of Johannesburg whose turbulent drawings won him fame soon after he first wandered into a city gallery with some examples of his work, is in the news again.

Five of his drawings are in the South African exhibit at the Sao Paulo Biennale; one has been chosen for a catalogue illustration. His second one-man show has already opened in Johannesburg. His previous show was almost a sell-out and last year he also exhibited successfully in Durban.

Dumile's work has been bought by several South African galleries and by collectors in the United States and Europe.

An early drawing by Dumile: horses in a Bantu township. The picture was drawn on the floor and the lines of the folds are visible in the paper.
